LOCAL RESUME

The Doings of Yourself and Others West

The ice cream sociable given at the Timpe school house, Tuesday evening, was one of the most enjoyable affairs of the summer. The attendance was not so great as it would have been, had not a shower come over at the time people were preparing to go. As it was, there were about 40 people there who report a very pleasant evening which only ended after midnight.

One of the best samples of this year's flax, that it has been our pleasure to see, was brought to Almont the 29th of July, by W. D. Wagoner. The sample, and Mr. Wagoner has a large field of flax as good, was pulled six weeks from the day of sowing. It measured 27 inches in height and was in the bloom. The stems were strong and healthy and bore a very large number of bolls. If conditions remain right through the maturing period, that field should give a tremendous yield per acre.

Friday morning the town was visited by a number of the aboriginal settlers of the plains, who at least seemed well pleased to have their pictures snapped by the local kodak artists. Also they spent a few hours trying to dispose of a number of bead ornaments.

The Kensington club of Almont will give an ice cream sociable Saturday evening, August 10, from 7 to 10 o'clock. Everybody cordially invited.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Smeestad have been entertaining the former's brother, Ed. Smeestad who lives at Plaza.

Auditor Phenning of the Mandan Mercantile Co., came down from New Salem the first of the week to look after some business matters for the company.

J. R. Herbert of Jamestown, spent a couple of days driving into the country with R. H. Templeton adjusting hail losses. In every instance the adjustments of loss was entirely satisfactory to the parties having the loss. This amicable & quick adjustment will make many people friendly to the companies doing business on that basis.

Note the change in the Mandan Mercantile company's ad this week.

The school directors have issued a call for a special school election to be held the 10th of August, in the schoolhouse. The purposes for which it is called appear in the notices published in other columns of the paper.

The report of the school treasurer of Sims township appears in this issue. It shows the school system in excellent financial condition.

Jesse Melton of Heart was an Almont business visitor, Monday.

Almont seems to have been the Mecca of the traveling men, the last few days. They have thoroughly covered the town, yet more of the boys arrive daily, and the game goes away orderless he leaves behind a feeling of cheery optimism that somehow makes one do his work more efficiently.

That the business men of Almont anticipate a good business is daily attested by the great loads of goods that are being unloaded at the stores and other places.

Hopes and Harvest.

The spring began with prospects fair; Of rain He gave a generous share, The farmers toiled with hope and cheer, Saying "'Twill be our banner year."

II

And so it seemed for quite awhile, The sun shone bright, the air was mild;

The ground was moist with ruin and dew And thick and fast the forage grew.

III

The heads of wheat were large and long, The crop well set, the stalks were strong;

And things seemed coming all our way Until we reached that stormy day.

IIII

Then came the hail that gut it down, And strew the wheat upon the ground;

So once again our hopes to fall And cause again the bitter wall.

V

But the God we serve will send the rain, Cause stalks to sprout and grow again,

So when the threshing time has come, Of wheat to sell we'll all have some.

LEZZIE R. RUPPÉ, CARL, N. D.

The above poem was written by one who knows what a hail can do in this part of the country. She had 'spring time hopes' shattered but thru it all there was a ray of hope—her grain was insured.

AFTER WILD SHEEP in CENTRAL ASIA

AMONG the many happy hunting-grounds in which I have found myself during the last thirty years, I know of none which has interested me more than the Great Altai mountains, where, last year, I had the good fortune to spend a month in search of the Orvis amnion. I have said interested me, and it should be understood that I intend to give my opinion from the sportsman's point of view, quite unique, owing to the total absence of any native hunters to assist, or even to give the least clue as to where the great sheep might be found. It may be superfluous to add that one invariably has the services and benefit of a second and usually very keen, pair of eyes to assist in finding the game and subsequently to help in the stalk. In the present instance, however, it was a case of single-handedness with a vengeance. The reason of this absolute dearth of local sportsmen is accounted for by the rooted objection which the native inhabitants of these wilds, the nomad Hassack, has to making the idea that it is not the thing to do. Foxes and camels, again, are plentiful, and the Hassacks of both sexes, when on foot, show up with the kneeboots with a grotesquely high but stump along in a most uncomfortable manner, as though every step would bring them down. Luckily, I had hunted the big sheep before, and was fairly conversant with his ways, so one morning soon after down, I started off to search the valley, at the mouth of which we were encamped. The morning was beautifully clear, and I took matters somewhat easily, as I had left directions for one of our Mongol servants to follow me up with the tent and my pony, for, as usual with these gentlemen, he was late, and enjoying his easy-seated "twelve hours" repose. Needless to add, I saw nothing of interest all the lunch-stand day. Working my way steadily up the half-hour stream at the bottom of the valley, after a while I made out the forms of two rams at the head of the valley. They were in a narrow stream, and soon began to feed on the new grass shoots. Then two deer came into view, I felt I was in luck, but "there's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." Scanning the rugged ground, I saw the best way to approach them, I soon recognized that it was not such an easy matter. To follow up the stream bed, over the mud and low moat being seen. The left side of the valley, a slope of broken rocks and shale, was equally out of the question. I therefore resolved to try the right side, though not without misgivings, on account of the snow slopes and forbidding-looking precipices. I concluded that if I succeeded in tracking this right side that I should be able to work round and about the valley. After waiting for an hour, the fine beasts made things somewhat easier for me by feeding down and behind a small rocky point. During my long watch I had been sending the Mongol with the ponies should appear and scare away the sheep. Chancing this, however, and judging I knew my Mongol, I started off up the stream. Some little way beyond the rocky point, a snow-ridge, expecting at any moment to disappear through the soft snow. Then followed a long and steady ascent over huge boulders of broken rock, interspersed with soft, wet rock. Here was where the local knowledge of the man on the spot would have been invaluable, for I had not been above a hundred yards from the sheep when the high ridge immediately above the sheep was impracticable. A change of place was, therefore, necessary. Holding on, I tried to scale the rocks to the right, which, I am convinced, would have deluged the heart of an ibex or that wild hunter leap with me, I could have succeeded in this, this morning, as it was. I had to work down to the lower ground again and take the least of a bad job across the stream. A bad job, too, it turned out, for having got within one hundred yards of the sheep, I discovered the sheep had disappeared, to my disgust I discovered the ram standing on the bank, springing straight down at me. Blinking slowly to the ground, I saw the other, having moved behind the ridge, and the other, having been killed by a shot, followed me. The last sheep carried a fine carcase, but was a little bit of a disappointment. As the sheep had moved slowly, I hoped that I might find them feeding, but still with to get on terms, but they took no chances, and when I got to the top of the ridge there was not a sign of them. I was just about to retire when I saw a grand sight. Several thousand feet above us were my five rams,

Stalking quietly away along the top of a stony ridge. The leader, who was the largest and whitest, had thick, massive horns, and they all, with one exception, would have made a fine trophy. I contemplated myself on thus getting a second chance, and watched them as they went "stilly" along. In the way they move when scared. At length the procession stopped, and they lay down on the steep side of the slope, from whence they commanded the whole of the valley. Of I went again, over huge, sharp boulders of broken rock; but I was soon held up on coming to the head of the valley. There was nothing for it but to wait patiently and make myself as comfortable and warm as possible among the boulders. After an hour or so, about 1:30 p. m., they rose, stretched themselves, examined the whole country-side, and again moved slowly off, away to the north. They were evidently in a nervous mood. Following them, after a while I crossed the snow patch, plunging through the snow, which lay in places was up to my middle, and following in the deep tracks of the herd. It was still work, and was followed by a still stiffer climb to the top of a narrow-backed ridge. This I descended, the rams still in view. The ground here was quite open; but wild sheep usually look for danger from below, and I remained unnoticed. They finally disappeared, slowly round the slope of a high rounded hill, about eight hundred yards ahead. I quietly started off to gain the crest of this hill, hoping to intercept them on shifting their quarters. I had no time to be lost. No, starting the Kalmuk, I pursued over the shoulder of the mountain, Huelua and I took up the blind trail, and I heard the report of the Kalmuk's bandurash, and momentarily expected to see him return smiling. Thus, things were all right, we eventually followed the path which had been left. They also had all three vanished, leaving portions of the first dead sheep's carcase scattered about. I had not time to be lost, as the Kalmuk returned, having, I understood, had a great share about the wounded ram and marked it down in a tale, not far from where we had started the day's work. Loading up the ponies, away we went again, searching fruitlessly for a long time among the boulders. Things looked bad. It was getting late, and we were just about to abandon the search till the morning, when, as good luck would have it, the old Kalmuk returned, and with him, a small dog was of my pony in a second, and, peering over, saw the five old ram, only just able to stand and looking very sick, about six miles away. The first in the shoulder, Huelua, the second was the middle of the dead ram, and had caught him near the point of the right shoulder and raked along his ribs. His horns measured fifty sheep, when thoroughly scared, travel many miles and successfully hide themselves. Leaving camp at 4:30 one morning, shortly before dawn, the two hunters and I had not been long at work when the Kalmuk pulled up short, but for late, for we had been seen first by a flock of nine rams, who were taking their early feed on the side of a steep ravine. Of they went, towards higher ground, but in no great haste. Rising up to the ridge along which they had descended, we were disconcerted, and soon viewed them again. They were some distance off, feeding on an open slope, which appeared to be secure from attack; but there was one dark spot in the distance, the herd and nothing three or four good heads among them, I started off with Huelua to stalk. A warm job it proved, up that steep, loose shale slope, and the pace was performance. At length we made the crest, and took it easy to study the situation. The wind, though light, was sou'by, but all seemed well, for the herd was busy feeding. They were what we wanted to be about one hundred and fifty yards off, but on a slope somewhat below us. The difficulty was to select the finest head, for to take one's eye off the herd for a moment was to lose one's suit more than to lose a moment. Under such circumstances one is always apt to be deceived as to which head to select to best previous records. The question, however, was not to pick out the largest, but the head getting their heads up and beginning to look suspicious. In another second they would have been off, so taking a quick aim, I fired the "big valley" a long way below, and a stampede ensued across the foot of the steep slope below. The two animals were so hunched up that it was impossible to pick out the best, and the result of my three shots was to bring down a moderate-sized one only. The herd then disappeared at racing speed, and when next seen they were in the "big valley" a long way below. We descended and cut up the dead sheep. This finished, and the old Kalmuk carrying the head over his shoulders, we rode down the slope after the herd, which was evidently in a great hurry at the end of a long spring. Here, while on the look-out, we suddenly saw the herd, now only seven in number, come bolting back towards us, and were again fired upon by my fellow-sportsman, who just then appeared on the top of the mountain. The one looked like charging straight at us; but we were off and made things looked bad. It was getting late, and we were in a hurry to get away. We were with us, but we were not to be lost. We were with us, but we were not to be lost. We were with us, but we were not to be lost.

BEST BREEDS OF CATTLE FOR PRODUCING PROFITABLE BEEF

Do Not Try to Run the Breed and for Best Results Only One Kind Should be Used—Shorthorn, Hereford and Aberdeen Angus Will Use Surplus Food to Good Advantage.

By W. G. CHISHOLM.
All cattle are divided into or fall into certain classes according to the work they do to best advantage. In other words, the disposition they make of the feed they consume, over and above the amount needed for maintenance determines this class. What we take into consideration that cattle are only machines for converting hay, fodder and grains into some product for human food, and they are the only machines or factories that will convert these raw materials into beef, milk, butter and cheese, we get a much clearer conception of the real meaning of best cattle, milk cattle or better cattle. By best cattle we mean those types of cattle which will use their surplus food to best advantage in the manufacture of beef. Of this type we have three prominent breeds: Shorthorn, Hereford and Aberdeen Angus. While these are the three leading beef breeds there are others, such as Red Poll and Devon. By some writers the Red Poll and Devon are present as dual purposes but for the present we are concerned with the beef breeds. Of the three breeds mentioned first we can scarcely say one is better than the other, for they belong on the same plane, and it is a matter of preference with each man for himself, which he likes best, and then that becomes the best for him. Every one of us will give our best attention and efforts to the things we like best. Therefore the best of cattle we like best will give us the best results and be the best for us. The two remaining breeds are good and in some sections are very popular, but for strictly beef purposes are rather small and have a tendency toward the dairy formation. When we go into the business of producing beef we want the breed of cattle that will produce the greatest amount of meat from the least quantity. Then it becomes a matter of selecting one of the best breeds. I say one of the best, because the same one will make the mistake that

Aberdeen-Angus Cattle.

DENMARK'S COW TESTING CLUBS

The Danish government has organized a series of cow testing clubs throughout the country. The purpose of these clubs is to improve the quality of the Danish cow herd by selecting the best individuals for breeding. The clubs are organized in various parts of the country, and each club consists of a number of farmers who have agreed to test their cows together. The testing is done by weighing the milk produced by each cow, and recording the results. The clubs also provide information to the farmers about the best practices for raising and caring for their cows. The Danish government has provided financial support for the clubs, and has also established a system of awards for the best cows. This system has been very successful in improving the quality of the Danish cow herd, and has served as a model for other countries.

For Governor.

L. B. Hanna.

This week the Arena management has extended its service to the extent of printing four pages at home. It has added a column of cartoons and one complete story with each issue.

The cartoons portray the people who are ever buying the 'pig in the bag' and then instead of the fine fat porker they find a scrawny, lean razorback.

The stories are written by a writer who has bent his energies to looking up the intricate and abstruse decisions of the various courts and sprinkling them with a bit of romance or adventure, bring out a story, which figuratively speaking, keeps one standing on tip-toe trying to read over the next fellow's shoulder till the tale is ended.

Speaking of ourselves, we desire to say we are trying to, each week, improve the Arena and make each new issue a little better than the preceding one. Indeed we are trying to represent the town to the outside communities as one of the progressive towns of the state, but we know we will be not able to do so until every business of the town is represented in the columns of the Arena. You all want the people to come to Almont to do their trading, then why not get busy and show that you have goods to sell, instead of playing "The Ancient Mariner"? He stopped the wedding guest, but you can't stop the wheels of Progress. If you try it, you'll wonder what hit you if you ever wake up. Better get up front and help Miss Progress drive.

SIMS SIDELIGHTS

Miss Agnes Ims has been on the sick list the last few days.

Rev. G. N. Isolanv and wife visited friends in Almont Tuesday. John Jacobson transacted business at Almont the first of the week.

Joseph Jacobson visited relatives in Almont, the latter part of last week.

Mr. and Mrs. George Ims and children visited friends in this vicinity last Sunday.

Severin Jacobson of Mandan was the guest of his mother and brothers of this place, a few hours last Sunday.

Hubert Steadman is working as third trick operator at this point, pending the appointment of a regular man.

The bridge across the creek in Sims was damaged to such an extent by the wind storm of the 25th as to render it unsafe for traffic.

Mrs. Fred Swanson of Bismarck and who has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Olin, for a few days, returned to her home the latter part of last week.

Miss Hanna Herlund of Mandan spent a few days in this vicinity last week, bidding farewell to her numerous friends as she intends to leave in a few days for Boston where she is to make her future home.

The most terrific wind and rain storm of recent years visited this section of country last Thursday, the 25th, causing considerable damage to the crops and other property. At the home of J. Ims, a window was broken and a large portion of shingles blown from the roof allowing the torrents of rain to enter and literally flood the house and causing considerable damage to the walls and furniture. The pig pen was blown to pieces.

At Theo Feland's place the barn was blown down and a window in the house was broken. At Feland's Spur a long string of empty stock cars were stored and by the raging wind were driven down on the main track, causing a bad wreck when a west bound freight train, running at a good rate, struck the empty cars at 9:45 that night.

Fortunately no one was hurt. The engineer, fireman and the head brakeman narrowly escaped death. None of them had time to jump, and when one stops to think and consider that the engine plowed thru three stock car, reducing them to kindling wood, before the train came to a stop, we can almost realize the feelings that possessed the three when they realized they were unhurt. The engineer, who frightened and excited, whistled out a flag to protect the rear of the train against No. 5, which was due in a very few minutes. The accident happened in a sharp curve of the track which accounts for the fact that the train could not be stopped in time to prevent the accident.

Had this freight train been ten minutes longer at Sims, it would have had to let No. 5 go by them and the chances are, had this happened, that several lives might have been lost. It took the wrecking outfit about ten hours to clear the track for traffic. Engine, No. 1550, was so badly disfigured that it will probably have to be sent to the shops at Brainerd for repairs.

NOTICE OF SPECIAL SCHOOL SECTION.
Notice is hereby given that a special school election will be held in Almont, Morton county, North Dakota, on the 10th day of August, 1912, to vote whether to discontinue and to sell, or not to discontinue or sell the schoolhouse now situated on section 28, township 138, range 80. The polls for said election will open at 2 o'clock p. m., of said day, in the south room of the schoolhouse, of the town and state street, and continue open until 5 o'clock p. m., of the said election day.

Mr. Howland the wellknown & hustling representative of the Fargo Wholesale Grocery house, was a business visitor to Almont, the fore part of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cunningham returned Wednesday from their wedding tour thru several states, and spent a couple of days in this place visiting the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. August Timmerman. The newly-weds left on No. 7, Thursday, for South Heatl, where they will make their future home.

Liquor Waste and Summer Outings.

The amount of money we spend every year in the United States, either directly or indirectly, for liquor would give a two weeks' vacation to every man, woman and child in the land, with their board and expenses paid. We spend approximately $1,500,000,000 a year for alcoholic drinks and we spend as much more for judges, police, jails, poor houses and insane asylums to take care of people who get into trouble through hard drink. That makes $3,000,000,000 or $30 apiece for everybody. For a family of father, mother and 4 children it amounts to $180 a year, nice for an outing in the country. —New York American.

That would be nice for to help a long Sisie in her college work. To lighten John's labors as he works his way thru the agricultural college.

The Lost Pigger Found.

Mandan News—Howard Smith, the alleged blind pigger of Hebron, when arrested last week and while in charge of a deputy sheriff, was suddenly wafted away in an auto by one Carl Zendenberg, was recently caught at Bismarck, and was given a justice trial, when he was bound over to the district court under $1000 bond.

WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE?

If you were given a party you would send out invitations to the people you wanted to have come, and only those you had invited are expected to come. If you were given a party you would not send out invitations to all the people in the neighborhood. You would expect the greatest of the neighborhood to be invited. You would expect the greatest amount of pleasure and the most interesting. Probably compare the invitation, the party, the fest and the same and readily go to the place where the invitation is most attractive.

So is it with your business. You have rival firms who are engaged in the same line of business that you are. You would like to have the greatest amount of business, the most profitable, the most successful. You would like to have the greatest amount of business, the most profitable, the most successful. You would like to have the greatest amount of business, the most profitable, the most successful.

Her face was almost invisible. I strained incredulously after her meaning.

"Did I understand you to say you were brought up before the president there at Radcliffe?"

"Radcliffe?" Her head shook. "No—Harvard." And I nodded, recalling the affiliation between the two institutions at Cambridge.

She sighed and her beautiful lashes drooped sadly. By Jove, I was so jolly glad I couldn't manage a word.

I knew, of course, that my heart was broken, but it didn't matter. I loved her just the same. I should always love her; she had tried to let me know she loved me better than any man before, but it didn't matter.

"We would marry and go out on a ranch or something of that sort, where the future, and what you could of civilization didn't count, and no rude rebuff or sneer of society would ever chill her warm impassiveness at Cambridge."

She smiled archly. "See here, Dicky, I thought we were going to tell each other the story of our lives. Your turn now; tell me how the loots to you, this girl that calls at last, there's always the one girl comes at last, they say, if you wait long enough. Go on—tell me—what's she like?"

"Of course, you don't know," I said significantly.

"What of course I wouldn't know—she's not even here. Bay, is she really so pretty?"

"You're not kidding me, are you?" she asked, looking at me with a challenge and I took it up.

"In black silk pajamas," I said daintily.

Her blue eyes opened wide. For a moment I feared she would be offended by my audacity, but her brilliant smile of laughter reassured me.

"Say, you're not so slow, are you?" And her hand came down on my back with a force that made me jump.

"Only show," she gurgled merrily, "say, you'd better never tell him about this black pajamas."

"She spoke so chokingly through a storm of laughter as she looked there at me on the back with a clublike blow, incredible from that little hand."

"That I'll never say a word, Dicky," she said, coming out of her laughter and pointing, indignantly, "Never! And don't you, Dicky—don't you ever! Understand! Mum's the word!"

"Oh, but no buts—prudence!" "Why, then—of course, if you wish it."

"That's right, because I want to come again—that is, if you want me. If Brother Jack was so to you, Dicky, as I am, he would sooner have me at a hotel, than at all."

CITY OF BANBURY PASSES

Famous Old Place in England is Being Repeopled, White-Ruby Histories Are Revealed.

London.—The story of Banbury is a story of a city that has been reborn. It is no longer necessary to go to Banbury to see Banbury. The old city, dear to the old lady who rode to the city on a mule, has been reborn in a modern spirit, and the old city is still the city of Banbury.

The old Banbury is now a city of the future. It is a city of the future, and it is a city of the future. It is a city of the future, and it is a city of the future. It is a city of the future, and it is a city of the future.

Human Yardstick

"Cholly, but I'm tired!" exclaimed a girl and with a groan, meeting a short acquaintance on Washington street.

"How about that young doctor? Has he been there?"

"Not yet. Papa nearly rubbed everything last night."

"How was that?"

"The doctor was pleading for my dear old papa, papa came in and asked him to take a look at my toes."

"Important!—Mothere examining carefully every bottle of medicine and sure remedy for aches, pains, rheumatism, and all the ills that afflict the human race."

Doctors Could Not Help Mrs. Temple of Regained Health through Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

"I am very glad to tell you Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me. For five years I suffered from rheumatism and was nearly unable to get up. I had tried every doctor's medicine and used local treatments, but nothing helped. I had nearly given up when I saw an advertisement for your Compound. I bought a bottle and took it as directed. In a few days I was able to get up and in a few weeks I was well. I have been well ever since."

BEST DEFENCE AGAINST DISEASE

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Are the Tonic to Use When the Blood Is Weak

This, pure blood is an invitation to sickness. The blood is at work, day and night, to maintain the health and vigor of the body. If the blood is weak, the body is weak. The blood is the life of the body. It carries the oxygen to the cells and carries away the waste. It is the blood that gives the body its color and its strength. If the blood is weak, the body is weak. It is the blood that gives the body its life.

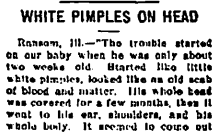

When I was 16 years old I went into a decline and my parents feared I was going into consumption. I was so weak that I could not do much of anything. The sickness came on me gradually. I was pale and seemed to lose my strength. My attending school at Winton at the time and became so nervous that I had to give up my studies. WHITE PIMPLES ON HEAD

Ransom, Ill.—"The trouble started on our baby when he was only about two weeks old. Started little white pimples, looked like an old scab of blood and matter. His whole head was covered for a few months. It went to his ear, shoulders, and his whole body. It seemed to ooze out thick and sticky on his head, while on the other parts of his body it was more like water coming out of the skin. It would scratch until the eruption would be all cured and then it would gradually appear. The least little scratch or rub would cause the scales to bleed, spread and itch. Never had a full night's sleep from all night.

The scales were horrid to look at. It lasted until he was about two and a half years old. Then we saw an excellent advertisement in the paper and we used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. We put the Cuticura Ointment on thick and let it stay as tight as lead on so he could not scratch the scales. Then we washed it clean with Cuticura Soap and warm water twice a day, and he was completely cured." (Signed) Mrs. F. F. Silliker, Dec. 20, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Name of each free, with 25¢ Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."

EX-SEN. WASHBURN IS DEAD

Famous Politically and Commercially in Northwest for Half a Century.

Minneapolis.—William D. Washburn, for 18 years in "union" and "business" in wheat and other agricultural products. A blow at such a gigantic system naturally aroused powerful opposition.

His term in the senate expired in 1903 and thereafter he devoted himself to "business," particularly in the development of his railroad and coal interests in North Dakota. He retained his hold on national affairs, however, and in 1908 was elected to the United States senate.

The Corrector of Destinies

Being a Tale of Randolph Mason as Related by My Friend at Bridge Street.

Copyright by Edward S. Clebs

On the evening of the twenty-third of December 7 was one of a party at Mr. H. M. Park's residence, at Devon Street, near the Park and North Street. The party was the American agent of the Berlin banking house of Messrs. H. M. Park & Co.

The little party on this evening consisted of Madame Von Haber, the Countess Winfield Gerry and myself. Young Gerry, who went everywhere among people of distinction taken to be economically rich. His brother, Marcus Gerry, was certainly one of the wealthiest men in New York. He was the largest stockholder in the bank, and the dictator of the Fifty-eighth National bank. Winfield Gerry was under thirty, a certain young fellow, almost all handsome as a young Hercules, with great, dark, eyes, and a rickety, he had been brought up from boyhood on the coast. I think, and was connected with the Latin American trade.

I do not remember ever to have been so fortunate as cards as on this evening. When we arose from the table, I had won about two hundred. The remainder was the loss of Winfield Gerry. I was glad of this distribution of the loss. Young Gerry was not at all as idle young fellow with millions at his finger tips.

The baron, keeping his money, like a Testa in gold, handed out the do-bles. Mr. Gerry said that he would give me a check at the club, and asked me to ride down town with him in the carriage. Young Gerry was led by me to the turn to the right, and I, in a quiet, even voice, as though he were announcing a score:

"I can't pay you, Mr. Park. I turned in astonishment to see if he was joking. The electric light in the carriage showed me a face distinctly drawn and of an angry expression. There was no pleasure behind that countenance. The solution came to my instantly. This man, posing as a gentleman, was in fact a rascal, who was about to question the regularity of the same, the regularity of a friendly assist at bridge in the house of such people as the Von Haberts. I bristled with indignation.

"And may I inquire," I answered, "why is it that you cannot pay me, Mr. Gerry?"

"The man did not at once reply. He took a cigarette from his pocket, lighted it and leaned back on the cushions of the carriage.

"For the best reason in the world, Mr. Park," he answered; "I have at the moment, to be entirely accurate, but two hundred and twenty-five dollars and seventy-five cents."

I was greatly relieved. "My dear sir," I laughed, "do not expect you to carry about a cash drawer in your Englishman's coat. You should have something like a hundred thousand sterling, and who did not have a shilling in his pocket when you rode to the club."

"You are alone there," he said.

"My annoyance returned. I detest passives at banter. "I trust," I said, "that you will permit me to understand your position better. I have no doubt," he said, looking me evenly in the face. "I have not intended to be either obscure or taciturn. The sum which I have just advanced represents all the money that I have in the world. My reputation for wealth is a mere name. I am a miser, and I have a few dollars exclusive of this little club dues, stable and tailor bills, various club fines, and rent from houses. I own a twelve-horse carriage, but I have no money. I have perhaps five thousand dollars of personal effects; horses worth a little over a hundred and a bundle of worthless stocks. I am heavily poor, atrociously poor, you see, Mr. Park."

"I intended to astonish you," he said. "You will doubtless get the down a red," he went on, "to join a game of bridge when I had not the money to play my losses. I had intended to try to play. I called, intending to make my excuses to the baroness and drank. I found this position terrible, and it was due to my being obliged to cover my proportion of probable loss." He passed and made a deprecating gesture as if he was the father of the ancient to picture fortune a woman. I might have guessed.

"Then he stopped, knipped off his gloves, took out a jewel from his pocket, and handed it to me. It was a diamond necklace, and he said, "I thank you for the country," he said, "but you would much better take them. They will permit me to leave by the return in ten minutes. On that point I have no objection. On that point I have no objection. On that point I have no objection."

"Yes," I answered; "per curiam upon your duty. The mandate will issue from the United States Court. The Atlantic Canadian Court." "Returned out of court, compromised, as assumed by the adjudicator."

"And," I replied, "I wish to see you in the morning, really."

"I wish to see you in the morning, really."

"I wish to see you in the morning, really."

"I wish to see you in the morning, really."
